Conference Introduction:

Diplomacy is considered a vital tool for understanding and analyzing international relations and the global order. It remains the most effective means of influencing the decisions and behavior of foreign governments and peoples through negotiation and dialogue.

Historically, the diplomatic function was limited to conducting formal relations between sovereign states. However, it has since expanded to include summit meetings, international conferences, parliamentary diplomacy, the international activities of supranational entities, digital diplomacy, and more.

The core issue addressed by this conference emerges from the significant transformations witnessed in the contemporary era across all levels. These changes have led to a growing interest in the study of diplomacy, particularly in light of numerous emerging variables that have impacted the international community and its stability. These include the expansion of the international system with the rise of new actors, the phenomena of terrorism and organized crime, and the technological revolution and its far-reaching effects — all of which have heightened the relevance and necessity of diplomacy today.

Conference Objectives:

The main objective of this conference is to explore the role of diplomacy in managing international relations, particularly in light of the transformations taking place in the international environment. These changes have significantly impacted diplomacy in terms of its roles, functions, and forms. The diplomatic function has undergone several shifts as it attempts to adapt to the new environments shaped by globalization. These changes relate to the mechanisms of diplomacy, its scope, the expansion of its horizons, and the increasing complexity of its practices.
