Preamble to the National Symposium

The international system is witnessing profound transformations affecting various dimensions of power, manifested in the gradual transition from unipolarity towards a more complex and interconnected multipolarity. Middle powers and emerging powers have become major actors in shaping the directions of global politics, amid the emergence of new challenges related to energy and food security, the digital revolution, non-traditional threats, and increasing geopolitical competition in the Mediterranean and African regions.

In this context, Algeria faces strategic challenges and opportunities that require a reassessment of its geopolitical positioning and the strengthening of its capacity to adapt to the dynamics of a rapidly changing world. Through its geographical advantages, energy resources, active diplomacy, and efforts to strengthen South-South partnerships, Algeria can play a significant regional role in shaping emerging balances of power.

This national symposium seeks to analyze these major transformations, anticipate international developments, and mitigate their risks through a multidimensional approach, while exploring Algeria's role and strategic position in a manner that ensures the protection of its interests.

Symposium Research Questions

- How can Algeria redefine its strategic position and role in a way that ensures the protection of its national interests and strengthens its regional influence?
- What options and mechanisms should be adopted to achieve effective strategic positioning in a multipolar world characterized by intense economic, technological, and security competition?
